

Telwater opens their doors to the public for guided factory tours

November 25, 2013

Telwater has opened their doors to offer guided factory tours of the Savage factory for the public. A tour of the Telwater Factory offers the public an exclusive look at the innovative construction process of Australia's favourite tinnies.

The Telwater factory is located on a 10 acre site at the Gold Coast's Marine Precinct and includes a small boat factory, large boat factory and packaging factory.

The free, fully guided tours offer a rare opportunity to view the complete manufacturing procedure including the process of plasma cutting; pressing and welding of marine grade aluminium, through to custom designed paint booths and the complete fit out stage of each boat.

Telwater currently has a team of over 250 dedicated staff including expert welders, painters, carpenters, engine technicians and storemen all offering the highest quality of workmanship and dedication to their brands.

And with a committed research and development team Telwater is continuously setting industry standards with their innovative designs and advanced technology.

Telwater Director of Sales and Marketing Damien Duncan said it was the first time members of the public could jump online and book in for a tour time.

'We have always had a lot of demand when it comes to factory tours; it is something our Savage customers have continuously requested so we are excited to announce we now have this unique experience available,' Damien said.

Tours are free of charge and bookings can be made online only, with a select number of dates available and limited spots get in quick to reserve your Telwater Factory Tour today.
